Latest News & Insights

The NYMEX rebounded a bit this week with the September contract settling on Thursday at $2.907, a gain of 4.83%. The October contract took over as the prompt and slid a bit on Friday but was still up for the week 2.74% to close Friday at $2.888. The balance of the curve was slightly higher.

Warmer forecasts extending into September along with another lower-than-expected storage injection from the EIA of just 15 Bcf, vs. the low to mid 20's, were the major bullish drivers. Additionally, modest increases in LNG exports coming from the Freeport facility aided as well. Next Monday is Labor Day, so we will not be producing a report. Please reach out with your questions.
